

Textbooks

- You may assign to your courses textbooks you have written so long as any royalties received are donated. All such donations must be disclosed on the Annual College and University Disclosure form. Any textbooks you authored may be used in other NJIT courses so long as you were not “directly and substantially” involved in the selection of the textbooks. These royalties may be retained.
- NJIT employees are often solicited by dealers interested in purchasing their textbooks. Selling textbooks (including desk or instructor copies) is an ethics violation and any such inquiries should be reported to the Ethics Office.
- Governor Murphy recently signed a bill requiring the State’s higher education institutions to develop an open textbook plan to address textbook affordability. Faculty must make reasonable efforts to keep assigned materials affordable and accessible.
