Dear Members of the NJIT Community,

I am pleased to share with the community a draft of our Self-Study, the culmination of nearly three years of effort. The Self-Study will be submitted to the Middle States Commission on Higher Education as part of our upcoming reaffirmation of accreditation.

I would like to thank all who contributed, in particular the core leadership team working closely with me on the Self-Study and related tasks: Dr. Eugene Deess, Dr. Janice Daniel, and Dr. Regina Collins. Beginning with a Needs Analysis and a Review of Assessment across our campus, these individuals have worked tirelessly to see this project through to its completion.

I would also like to thank the Self-Study Steering Committee (listed below) and all members of the eight Working Groups who contributed time and effort to assessing our university and ensuring our compliance with the Middle States Standards for Accreditation and Requirements of Affiliation. I am confident we will have a positive outcome to our Team Visit in early April, 2022.

I invite all members of the community to read the Self-Study and provide comments and feedback. You can access a PDF of the document here or on the Office of Institutional Effectiveness webpage under "2022 Middle States Accreditation." Note that the document is password protected; the password is self-study.

To the extent possible, the efforts of the Working Groups are reflected in this document; however, page constraints necessitated editing to fit within the 116 pages allowed. To capture and organize your feedback, we have developed a Google form which can be submitted multiple times as you review the document. Alternatively, you may email your feedback to Dr. Regina Collins (regina.s.collins@njit.edu). Comments will be addressed after the community review period ends on October 15th.

Thank you for taking the time to review the Self-Study, and thank you once again to all who contributed.
