EXPERIENCE FUTURE IN THE MAKING.
I MAKE FACE SHIELDS TO HELP FRONT-LINE WORKERS.”

- Greg Tanis ’20, Mechanical Engineering

Engineers joined physicists. Advanced manufacturing specialists joined medical consultants. And they all joined NJIT students inside the NJIT Makerspace to design and fabricate PPE devices in rapid response to COVID-19. At the start of the pandemic, NJIT fully dedicated its Makerspace to creating much-needed protective medical equipment.

Multi-disciplinary teams at NJIT operated in tight collaboration, putting additive manufacturing and prototyping facilities to work. From laser-cut face shields that resist pathogens to short-term-use field ventilators, vital problem-solving equipment has made its way into the hands of doctors and nurses as a result of NJIT’s collective efforts.

Making it happen at the NJIT Makerspace.

PREPPING FOR EMERGENCY AT MEDICAL SCHOOL

Soojin Kim ’19, Biomedical Engineering, had one response to the chaotic emergency room scenes she saw as COVID-19 unfolded: “I’m in.” Witnessing the competence-under-fire of trauma workers prompted her decision to specialize in urgent care at medical school after NJIT. Kim says working in NJIT labs gave her the confidence to tackle new, complex skills quickly.
